CONF 250: Narratives of Conflict. 3 credits.

Imaginative fiction can prompt self-reflection, expose varied perspectives and experiences, reflect social understandings of conflict, and allow us to examine, at a distance, the challenges and dynamics of conflict. This course will focus on themes reflecting perennial concerns related to identity, the human condition, collective violence and social values. Examining conflict through literature will challenge, complicate, and elaborate our understanding of human conflict and experience. The course begins with a discussion of how to read/interpret texts as a mechanism to understand social narratives of conflict, a topic that will recur throughout the course. We then read and discuss roughly one novel every two weeks, as well as short stories, poems, and a play. The last part of the course is spent writing original stories about conflict and participating in a writer's workshop. Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). Limited to three attempts.

CONF 320: Interpersonal Conflict Analysis and Resolution. 3 credits.

When, where, and why do relationships experience conflict? When are these conflicts productive and when are they toxic? How can you create space for problem solving and healing within relationships? In this course you will gain a greater understanding of assessing and intervening in conflicts as they arise between individuals and in small groups, learning concepts and skills for understanding the causes, patterns, systems and dynamics of difficult issues and situations. You will engage with different dimensions of interpersonal conflicts, from personality and individual differences, to relational history and context, to culture and worldview. Through hands-on tutorials, role plays and case studies, you will leave this course with a better sense of how to transform conflict through relationship-building, whether at work, as a professional, or in your daily life. Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). Limited to three attempts.

CONF 326: Negotiation. 3 credits.

The ability to negotiate and manage conflicts effectively is an essential skill in international, community, organizational and personal settings. Negotiation is the art and science of securing an agreement between two or more independent parties. This course is an introduction to the analysis and practice of negotiation and provides a solid foundation for further inquiry and application. Students will examine research and theories of negotiation, how different cultures influence conflict, frameworks for analyzing negotiation, and the roles of various factors (influences and contexts, tactics and strategies) on the negotiation process and outcome. This course will include a blend of lectures, class discussions, individual and group exercises, simulations and negotiation role plays in class. Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). Limited to three attempts.

CONF 335: Justice and Reconciliation. 3 credits.

Explores justice and reconciliation from a conflict perspective. Drawing on approaches in the interdisciplinary fields of sociolegal studies and conflict analysis and resolution, the course considers these and other questions: How does injustice fuel conflict? What role should justice play in guiding conflict prevention and addressing the aftermath of violence? What is reconciliation and how do we know when it has been achieved? Are justice and reconciliation mutually reinforcing processes or does one stand in the way of the other? The first part of the course focuses on foundational concepts and questions understood through domestic US examples, examining topics such as: gender equality and gender violence, migration and integration, discrimination, identity politics, healing communities, and environmental justice. We then broaden our perspective geographically, as we examine justice and reconciliation as responses to mass atrocity. Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). Limited to three attempts.

CONF 337: Restorative Justice. 3 credits.

Restorative justice is a framework based in the wisdom and practices of Indigenous peoples across the world. It offers an approach to wrongdoing and harm in contrast with traditional punitive systems, as well as a model for proactive community-building that centers interconnectivity. This class explores the roots and origins of restorative justice; examines how it is being used from schools to legal systems to truth-telling processes; and considers critical perspectives on its efficacy and transformative potential. Topics include Restorative Justice Roots and Foundations; Restorative Justice Philosophy and Practices; Restorative vs. Retributive Justice; Restorative Justice and the Criminal Legal System; Restorative Justice with Schools and Youth; Truth-Telling and Reconciliation; and the Future of Restorative Justice. Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). Limited to three attempts.

CONF 340: Global Conflict Analysis and Resolution. 3 credits.

Why is conflict more likely to occur in some places and times and not others? Why do certain groups use violence against civilians more than others? What connects local and global challenges? How can communities devastated by violence build peace? In this course you will examine globalization and structural causes of conflict and analyze the circumstances that aggravate old conflicts or lead to the emergence of new ones. You will also explore the conditions that promote peace and different methods of conflict intervention and resolution in international conflicts. Global conflict may involve sovereign states, international and non-government organizations, non-state armed groups, crime syndicates, and nonviolent protest movements; you will examine the roles these play in both conflict and peace. This course will develop your ability to compare and apply major approaches to understanding the origins of global conflicts and critically evaluate opportunities for peacebuilding.

Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). Limited to three attempts.

CONF 347: Mobilizing for Change and Justice. 3 credits.

Mobilizing for Change and Justice explores how and why movements for political change and justice have historically emerged in the United States and globally. During the course we will consider How do we understand the concept of justice? Why do some movements employ non-violent strategies while others engaged in violence? What is the relationship between social, political and economic institutions that may constrain human action and human agency to organize for change? What role does repression and state violence play in shaping mobilization for change and justice? How do movements diffuse across international boundaries? and Why do some movements achieve their goals (at least some of them) while others falter? The course will explore theoretical concepts as well as a variety of examples of mobilization for change and justice across time and space, as well as struggles for justice that turned violent. The course includes case studies, lecture, discussions and films. Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). CONF 756: Addressing Intractable Conflict. 3 credits.

This course is about the biggest problems facing our communities, our nation, and our world today. Our communities, our nations (the US and others), and the world have proven remarkably unable to "solve" any of these problems. Why? We assert it is because they are all underlain by a more fundamental problem the inability to constructively deal with difficult and intractable conflicts. These conflicts prevent us as individuals, organizations, and governments (at all levels) from making wise decisions or taking effective action that will address any of these pressing problems. Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). May not be repeated for credit.

Recommended Prerequisite: CONF 501, CONF 600, or CONF 801.

CONF 759: Building Peace in Divided Societies. 3 credits.

Explores the roots of peacebuilding as a conflict resolution strategy in terms of changes over time, basic assumptions underpinning the emergence and continuance of conflict, building peace, and challenges to community participation as well as varied reactions to the building peace enterprise. The tensions theoretically and practically between building peace and continuity of the conflictual status quo will be explored in detail throughout the course. The focus on communities intersects and often conflicts with the more prominent global peacebuilding frame, often considered an elite endeavor as well as the political economy of the status quo as evidenced in the United States. Why, for example, does the term peacebuilding not appear regularly when considering domestic US conflict and its effects? There are, of course, more questions than answers. However, the focus of the course is to expand our thinking, conceptualizing, and theorizing regarding the current state of peacebuilding. Offered by Conflict Analysis & Resolution (<http://catalog.gmu.edu/colleges-schools/peace-conflict-resolution/>). May not be repeated for credit.
