Banner Code: LA-BA-LAS

Email: las@gmu.edu

Website: las.gmu.edu/programs/LA-BA-LAS

This program is no longer accepting applications for new students.

The BA in Latin American studies looks at contemporary Latin America and its progress through a long and turbulent history of conquest, resistance, and cultural mixing. The result is a rich and unique blend of African, indigenous, and European cultures. Majors develop a broad expertise in the region while also pursuing an individualized program of study that suits their interests. Students improve their language skills and take courses in many disciplines, including anthropology, dance, economics, folklore, geography, government, history, and literature. All students have opportunities for research, global engagement, public service, and career preparation.

Admissions & Policies

This program is no longer accepting applications for new students.

Policies

Students pursuing this degree must complete 33 credits within the major, with a minimum GPA of 2.00.

For policies governing all undergraduate degrees, see AP.5 Undergraduate Policies.

Requirements

Honors

This program is no longer accepting applications for new students.

Honors in the Major

Latin American studies majors who have completed 75 credits (a minimum of 15 in Latin American studies, 6 of which must have been taken at Mason) with an overall minimum GPA of 3.50 and a minimum GPA of 3.50 in the major may apply to pursue advanced work leading to graduation with honors in the major. The application consists of a transcript, a recommendation from one member of the LAS faculty, and a brief description of a proposed research project.

Once accepted into the program, students pursuing honors in the major complete a two-course sequence LAS 491 Directed Reading for Honors in Latin American Studies and LAS 499 Research Seminar in Latin American Studies (Mason Core) (an honors section), which must be taken in successive semesters. In this sequence, students complete an advanced research project under the guidance of a faculty member. To graduate with honors in the major, students must earn a minimum GPA of 3.50 in the honors courses.
