The Russian and Eurasian Studies program brings together experienced Mason faculty who will guide your exploration of this region's culture, gender, class, ethnicity, economy, government, and politics. All majors have the opportunity to study abroad in Moscow or St. Petersburg. They acquire the language skills needed to function successfully in social settings and a variety of careers.

The bachelor of arts degree in Russian and Eurasian studies allows students to choose a concentration in one of three areas:

- Russian language and culture
- Russia studies
- Eurasia studies
